“Last Man Out”

Daily, William Rodriguez met with co-workers for breakfast at the Windows on the World Restaurant on the 106th floor of World Trade Center Tower #1. Nearly two hundred people, most of William's friends, were in the restaurant on the morning of September 11. None of them survived.

For nearly twenty years, the Puerto Rican-born, New Jersey resident was a custodian in-charge of the three stairwells — A, B and C — in the North Tower. In possession of the master key that opened all of the stairwell doors at each floor in the 110 story building, William Rodriguez personally saved the lives of 15 people that day and aided NYC firefighters in saving hundreds of others. Having told his chilling account to thousands of people across the globe, he comes to Boston sharing his stories of heroic and selfless first responders, his personal witness to explosions in the sub-basements “before” the plane hit the north tower and during the rescue efforts, and tales of strange noises coming from the vacant and restricted 34th floor.

Honored five times by President Bush, William Rodriguez has helped draft and implement legislation on behalf of victim families and first responders and was a champion, along with victim family members, in demanding the creation of the 9/11 Commission, during which his testimony was kept private and mysteriously excluded from its final report.

William Rodriguez has electrified audiences in Europe, Asia, and South America, and his uncompromising candor and heroism promises to be a night you will never forget.

Join fellow Bostonians in giving him a true Hero's welcome.
